The conference's purpose was to enable participants, through the exchange of information, to analyze the effects of recent decentralization reforms in educational administration on educational building. The report examines the legislative and administrative framework within which schools are planned and built, they way in which resources are allocated for their construction and maintenance, and how they are run on a daily basis. Part 1 provides a synthesis of recent developments in five OECD countries—France, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom. Diagrams illustrate each country's educational structure. Part 2 presents three papers, which deal in more detail with aspects of educational planning and management, drawing particularly on the Dutch experience. The papers show how the daily operation and management of educational buildings is irrevocably linked to the initial capital investment, and why it is essential to provide adequately for maintenance. Five figures are included. The annex contains a list of issues discussed in the group sessions. (LMI)Papers In This Volume Examine The Role Of State Finance Committees, The Present Status And Future Prospects Of Municipal Finances, Local Resource Mobilization, Municipal Expenditure, Grants-In-Aid, Reforms In Municipal Service Charges, Rent Control And Property Tax Base, Non-Tax Revenue Generation By Local Bodies, Policy Options For Reforming Local Government Finances.

This book critically examines whether wards committees have been a help or a hindrance to people's participation the extent of interaction between wards committees and the people on the one hand and elected representatives on the other and whether wards committees have been able to Secure accountability to the people. This book explores the informal (political) patronage relations between the urban poor and service delivery organisations in Mumbai, India. It examines the conditions of people in the slums and traces the extent to which they are subject to social and political exclusion. Delving into the roles of the slum-based mediators and municipal councillors, it brings out the problems in the functioning of democracy at the ground level, as election candidates target vote banks with freebies and private-sector funding to manage their campaigns. Starting from social justice concerns, this book combines theory and insights from disciplines as diverse as political science, anthropology and policy studies. It provides a comprehensive, multi-level overview of the various actors within local municipal governance and democracy as also consequences for citizenship, urban poverty, gender relations, public services, and neoliberal politics. Lucid and rich in ethnographic data, this book will be useful to scholars, researchers and students of social anthropology, urban studies, urban sociology, political science, public policy and governance, as well as practitioners and policymakers. This work looks at the impact of decentralization on local government arrangements and citizen participation in urban democracy processes in India. To analyse the various issues, it includes case studies from the major cities throughout the country. New Forms of Urban Governance in India: Shifts, Models, Networks and Contestations examines how local governments work together with other actors in governing mega cities in India, especially in view of globalization and internal transformation processes. It analyses whether new forms of governance open up opportunities for more participatory urban governance and improved service delivery, with particular focus for poor groups and marginalized groups in the cities. The book examines how citizens, more closely to citizens through decentralization, and working with private sector and civil society groups in providing urban services. Participation of the rich and the poor in local democratic processes, and the relations between local and city planning are focussed. Students and academics involved in Urban Studies, Economics and Development Studies and the study of Local Governance will find the work valuable.
That During The Last Four Decades The Urban Population Has Quadrupled. The burgeoning urban population brings with it several new challenges which the urban local governments (ULGs) have to face. There is, therefore, the need to revamp the structure of ULGs and redefine their functions, duties and powers in the changed urban scenario. The inclusion of several activities relating to the development and planning of the areas falling within the jurisdiction of the ULGs, the functions of ULGs in the context of the growing importance of the Gram Panchayats, the need for greater accountability of ULGs, the growing importance of decentralization, and the changing demographic trends make the need for a comprehensive view of the system of urban local governance in India necessary. The increasing importance of urban local governments, the issues they face, and the importance of a wide-ranging, analytical reflection on the major themes and debates that surround India's Constitution. The Handbook provides a comprehensive account of the developments and doctrinal features of India's Constitution, as well as articulating frameworks and methodological approaches through which studies of Indian constitutionalism, and constitutionalism more generally, can be thought about. India's constitutional heritage is unique and vast, and the book covers both large-scale and small-scale changes in the Constitution and the various ways in which the Constitution has been interpreted and applied. The book traces the evolution of the Constitution since independence and its role in shaping the development of India as a nation-state. It also considers the ongoing debates about decentralization, local governance, and the role of the Constitution in the development of India as a federal state. The book provides a comprehensive view of the system of urban local governance in India and its role in the development of the country.
